Young people have embraced social media to galvanize resources and empower civic engagement and activism. They seek change. The world needs to hear their voices! Join our Policy Pathways teaching staff as a guest presenter to inspire high school students to learn about public policy and its implications on their lives, communities, and the world.

Company Summary:

Policy Pathways, Inc. is a non-partisan 501 (c) (3) tax-exempt non-profit organization. Policy Pathways is committed to providing exceptional educational programming and developmental activities for youth and young adults who are interested in public policy, public administration, and public service leadership.

The mission of Policy Pathways is to develop the knowledge, skills, and abilities of individuals that desire to excel in policy studies and public administration degree programs and those who seek leadership positions in policy-related public and private sectors. Our vision is a society with representative diversity among high-level policy decision-makers and enhanced empowerment among disenfranchised populations and communities.

Our goals are to (1) play a vital role along a continuum of educational and social support for an underserved segment of the high school and college population; and (2) address the underrepresentation of individuals from historically-marginalized populations in gifted education and public policy, public affairs, and public administration degree programs and public service leadership positions (Sabharwal and Geva-May, 2013; Garces, 2014; Naylor et al., 2015). Policy Pathways is committed to equitable access to high-quality college preparatory public policy education. We help students achieve academic success and professional goals.

Position Summary and Responsibilities:

Guest lecturers, speakers, facilitators, and presenters will contract to work remotely as members of the Policy Pathways teaching staff. Policy Pathways faculty members are assigned to a Policy Pathways course that is being taught at a high school or through the Policy Pathways distance learning program. Each term, faculty members will teach, facilitate, or present 2.0 to 4.0 hours of engaging course content in an area of expertise and proficiency. All lessons and course content are delivered virtually using Zoom. Pedagogical approaches, instruction tools, and course content will be reviewed by a Policy Pathways administrator prior to instruction to ensure program standards and curriculum requirements.

Policy Pathways faculty members will be responsible for the successful completion of the following tasks:

- Consult and communicate with Policy Pathways administrators to clarify instructional expectations;
- Read and sign faculty teaching contract outlining assignment date(s) and time(s), expectations, and compensation;
- Draw upon academic experiences and/or professional expertise to develop enriching learning activities with real-world implications;
- Deliver engaging course content to increase students' understanding of the broad field of public policy;
- Align course activities with Policy Pathways curriculum guideline and course expectations;
- Support Policy Pathways instructional programming with synchronous and/or asynchronous web conferencing sessions to create and maintain a positive and productive academic/learning environment;
